Time is not linear therefore history is not. So how can we really interpret or understand history?

"This information is provided by extraterrestrial persons, women and men from the Taygeta star in the Pleiades cluster, through a written contact with us."

YAZHI SWARUU - PRESENTATION

On the history of the Earth, I am giving you an alternate linear history, based on the conjunction of data from the Federation, including Taygeta, my personal data when I have it, and also alternating terrestrial ones that have much more value for me than the official ones. which for me are basically rubbish lies and agendas.

As expected, this data has a linear structure. Like time and how it is perceived on Earth; Past→Present→ Future. A line, what they call; time arrow. I have given it this way because I am expected to do so by general understanding, but this does not reflect how I understand and perceive history.

So, it is quite a complicated job here, because the dates do not always coincide and that has no explanation if the sequence of events is seen linearly, but it does have it from a different non-linear position. Although, I understand how linearly it does not work that way. This would already be a separate topic, but it explains this topic of history. But it is difficult to understand without a more complete explanation itself. As an example of this we could have a reference a point in time represented by a photograph:

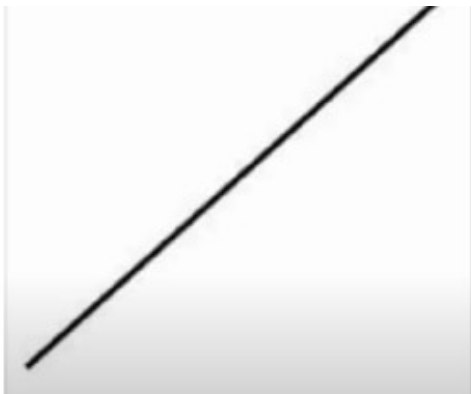

This is a frozen point in time and I will call it; Nexus point. We take for granted that there is a story before this photograph and another story after. It represents an event that I am telling you about. Any event as an example. But from a broader perspective several different past events result in that same photograph. For example, in one story, it is a photo of three friends who went for a walk on their land on a Sunday afternoon and had their photo taken. But also, it may be that those are rescuers out looking for a missing child, or they are promoting jackets for a clothing company. It can be taken as one being true, the other false. But it happens that many times the 3 result in the same photograph, a historical event. And to make things worse, the lines influence each other because they are the same since more expanded.

However, just because an event is a lie does not mean that it is true on another timeline. Although, it also happens and explains many things. Rather, a lie from the most expanded point of view presents multiple reasons, different people and reasons why such a lie has been formed, but a lie remains a lie. An actual event has multiple reasons why it happened. A lie also has multiple reasons why it was formed, but it is still a lie.

Understanding a lie and not something from another timeline when it happens that, in many, the vast majority, if not all visible alternate timelines, it is still a lie. I perceive history as multiple lines of events, some similar, some not so similar and some very different, all including each other, not isolated. And each person in this case, I who observed them - I observe, even today I am the one who gives them meaning. In this case, in my personal observation it is not a series of fixed events, but rather it is multiple different events happening on multiple timelines. Although, they are contradictory or different that form the current reality. For example, time lines where the 1991 Iraq war did not occur. And others where it did. Both lines converging to form what is called, today. Forming different opinions of people and current events. Base, for example, of the so-called "conspiracies". They say they are crazy because they see things that are not there. But one group of people can have their objective truth about something and another will also have their objective truth about the same thing or events, but diametrically opposed. So, both are right from their point of view, but they are unable to understand this and both sides fight each other with reason in hand.

It just creates conflict. Because from the so-called 3D you cannot understand, much less perceive what I am trying to describe above.

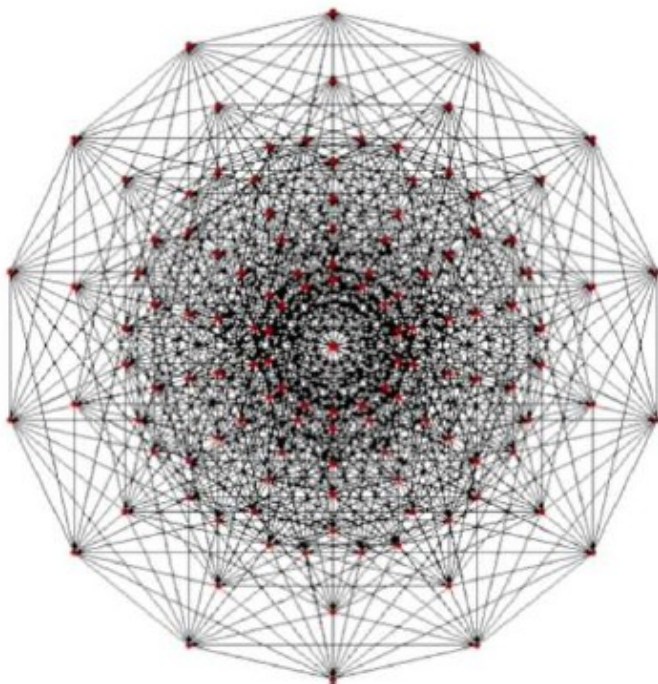

Here I only give two contradictory points of view, but both with the reason, truths. But specifically, they are not just two lines, but an infinity of lines. Billions of infinite lines. Each one with a variant of events and all converging to form what is today, the reality of today, the now. And, in addition to this, how this is interpreted varies from person to person. So, from my point of view, the story is completely wrong, both the official one and the one I am sharing with you. Leaving mine only as an alternative line, also true, but by no means the only one. There is no true past as there is no true present, either. Much less is there a single future. Everything is relative to whoever observes it. And, the past does not stay in the past. The past can be changed or the present influences the past or the past is the future or it can also be the present.

Humans see time like this

OR they see alternate timelines in quantum physics like this

As two timelines that go from the past, to the present, to the future. And, seeing an alternate, they understand it as something very advanced in their quantum physics. But the reality of time looks more in line with this:

But as a sphere, not flat. Wherein all lines and all points touch and influence each other all the time. And, time does not flow in only one direction, that depends on the mind of who sees it, generates it, or experiences it. So, going back to the history of the Earth, I know that I must give something linear for it to be understood, and I have given that. But it is not how I see or understand things. And, they may contradict me with evidence that in itself may or may not be valid, but that does not mean that what I told them is still valid, because I also rely on evidence or records, and I am not making it up myself.

History cannot be explained in a linear fashion. The fact that an event is put on one line or another is only something arbitrary and explanatory only because in itself there is only one time line as a sequence of chronological events, but that is and will always be relative to who sees or experiences it. So if I put a line of events in chronological order it will only be my interpretation and not someone else's. And, each person's interpretation is just as valid as the next. In itself, there are no timelines, that again is explanatory or rhetorical, because I need something to explain this, I need words and this already collapses the language. They are concepts, and telepathy is necessary and I miss it here.

So, it is again how I have explained it with existential densities, that each person only sees their own density and that 3D or 5D or any "D" is just rhetorical explanatory again. Being that there are not. There is only one Great Whole, The Source, or the Universe, The Great Whole. And each person sees only a part of that Great Whole and that part will be a density. And if more than one person, two or more see the same, it is only by perception agreements with each other, but they will never see the same, the same, only similar. Same with timelines and time, exactly the same. There is no time. It is only animated by the person's conscience. Where you pay attention at all times. And, create in your mind the chain or sequence of events that you call the timeline. And, this is what I see with my own experience. And, I also obtain information that supports what I have been able to empirically observe. Of course, I can't see everything, obviously, but the big holes where I can't see, I fill in with information from the Federation or Taygeta that is according to what I see as logical. So I do accept that it is my information, as I interpret it, as objectively as I can.
